

Omics Analyses of Food Functionality

Hisanori Kato

Hisanori Kato is Project Professor of laboratory of Health Nutrition, Graduate School of Agricultural and Life Sciences, The University of Tokyo. He received his PhD from the University of Tokyo in 1990. He served as a guest researcher at Diabetes Branch, National Institutes of Health, USA (1991-1993). He has been at the current position since 2017.

His recent research focus is evaluation of the effects of food components by making use of various omics technologies. He was recently awarded “Japan Society of Nutrition and Food Science Award for Excellence in Research” (2015).

Dr. Kato is the Secretary General of Federation of Asian Nutrition Societies (FANS) and is the Chair of the Organizing Committee of the 22nd International Congress of Nutrition (ICN2021). He is the president-elect of Asia-Pacific Nutrigenomics & Nutrigenomics Organization. He is currently the president of the Japanese Society for Amino Acid Sciences and a member of Science Council of Japan. He is an editorial member of many journals including Scientific Reports.